Abstract
"We the Students" is the University of Miami’s first interactive ethical debate show. Ground-breaking and on the cutting edge of television, the program unites students and communities from across the nation live via the Internet. Premier college debaters are flown in from top schools around the country to participate in an engaging debate on today’s most compelling moral issues. Not only do students debate each other regarding current moral problems, but the show is streamed online to our interactive website www.WeTheStudents.tv which enables students from college and university campuses around the world to discuss the issues in our chat room in real-time. Students have instant access to show archives, where they can watch previous episodes through the site. "We the Students" provides an opportunity for young adults to speak their minds and provide their opinions on topics that mold today's standards of morality. Students post their own ideas and comments on the webpage and contribute their views to the live debate. "We The Students" takes advantage of the media's most innovative trends and encourages student awareness, promoting conversation about modern ethical issues and providing an outlet for the views and opinions of the next generation of great thinkers.
